&his seminar will offer graduate students a road e!amination of early modern : nglish drama, with a primary emphasis on late 1.th and 1Ath century plays. While including Shakespeare, this seminar will mo"e eyond the oundaries of the 8 ard to focus on the wider tradition of drama in the period. We will situate these plays within their historical, cultural, theatrical and material conte!ts and e!amine them through the lens of contemporary criticism and theory. &his seminar, in particular, will e!amine the relationship etween early modern : nglish drama and women. While the early 1Ath century theater is 2in3famous for the use of oy actors, women were still in"ol"ed in the theater in a "ariety of ways, including translating drama and e"en, in one case, writing a full-length play. Ourthermore, women*s participation, as oth actresses and playwrights, significantly increased in the latter half of the 1Ath century. $n addition to focusing on this direct participation, we will also draw on feminist theory and criticism to e!plore how early modern : nglish drama conceptually engaged with issues of gender, su 'ecti"ity, agency, and the Nnature0 of women.
